

Dominique Marshall, PhD

Professor and Chair, Department of History, Carleton University

Director, Associations

Dominique Marshall is the History Department Chair at Carleton University. She teaches Canadian and Quebec history of poverty and welfare, families and childhood, state formation, as well as the transnational history of humanitarian aid, and Political Economy. She has written about the history of the Canadian welfare state, the history of children's rights, and the Child Welfare Committee of the League of Nations. Her current research is about the Conference on the African Child of 1931, and the early history of OXFAM in Canada.

She has been Supervisor of Graduate Studies of her department for four years, and the French Editor of the Journal of the Canadian Historical Association for 20 years. She was trained mainly at the Université de Montréal, with stays at Boston University, the London School of Economics, and SOAS. Her book, Aux origines sociales de l'État providence (1998) (available in English as The Social Origins of the Welfare State (2006)) received the Jean-Charles Falardeau Price from the HSSFC.

FEDERATION FOR THE HUMANITIES AND
SOCIAL SCIENCES

FÉDÉRATION
DES SCIENCES
HUMAINES

300-275 Bank, Ottawa, ON K2P 2L6 613.238.6112
info@ideas-idees.ca www.ideas-idees.ca