Canada's leading thinkers on art and culture are developing new ways for Canadians to tell our stories, and bring us closer to each other and to the rest of the world.

Humanities and social sciences researchers are helping artists and the public address identity and contemporary topics in a variety of new ways.

We're helping Canadians explore and express identity by:

- Using artistic processes in research
- Relying on art and the creative process as a way of exploring identity
- Mentoring and developing Canadians’ skills in writing, communication and design
- Embedding arts and culture in curricula to reach at-risk students
- Using new digital technologies to create interactive documentaries
- Exploring social problems through literature, theatre and film
- Using technology to expand the impact of artistic mediums such as dance and theatre
